

HUBBY'S ONE OF THE GIRLS

DEAR DIANA: Before we married, my husband confessed he liked dressing in women's clothes from time to time, but I had an awful shock when he showed me inside his wardrobe.

It contained nine dresses, make-up, jewellery, padded bras, stockings, high-heeled shoes, and three full wigs.

I didn't mind as he'd told me about his habit before we wed, but recently he has even been out shopping with me dressed as a woman.

I'm worried about what will happen if we have any family or what our neighbours would say if they found out.

My husband's doctor says he should be allowed to dress as a woman at will—to try to stop him would damage his mind.

He's now a confirmed transvestite, not a homosexual, and normal in all other ways.

■ Naturally, you don't like the situation, but you sound like a sensible person who can cope with it.

I hope you decide not to have a family for it's extremely difficult to carry on normally when children are involved.

As it is, your greatest problem seems to be your concern about friends and neighbours.

But most married couples have secrets and you can only do your best to keep this side of your husband's character under wraps.

Really, it's no one's business anyway!
