Demographic

The magazine was primarily aimed at straight men, although the content of some classified ads suggest that there was also a small female and gay male readership. Though the magazine was distributed nationally, much of the content, including news items and event reviews, was more directly relevant to New York readers.

The majority of the writers and artists who published in Screw were male.

Background Information

Screw Magazine was a humorous pornographic magazine that published articles, photography, and comics, about sex. Screw was published weekly on newsprint, and was primarily a black-and-white publication, with the exception of its cartoon covers. It was founded by Al Goldstein in 1968, and was published until 2003.

In its early decades, Screw was a significant player in the American adult entertainment publishing industry, predating Hustler by approximately six years. It struck a very different tone from earlier magazines such as Playboy, which stylized itself as a more highbrow publication and printed short fiction by authors such as John Updike, Kurt Vonnegut Jr., and Margaret Atwood. The joke about reading Playboy for the articles doesn't quite translate to Screw: though Screw did print a large volume of articles, almost all of its material was directly related to sex and sexuality, and it deliberately struck a much more raunchy and explicitly sexual tone. Though Screw certainly had no literary pretensions, it famously published a number of celebrity interviews, including ones with John Lennon and Yoko Ono. Screw Magazine's best-selling edition was reportedly published in 1973, and included nude photos of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

The magazine frequently employs "shock humour", and explicit language is used liberally throughout its pages. Photographs of celebrities are often edited, usually deliberately inexpertly, to make them look as if they are engaged in sexual activities. On many occasions, Al Goldstein accused politicians and journalists, particularly those who he perceived to have insulted him or with whom he disagreed, of engaging in more extreme sexual acts or fetishes. As an example, Issue #443 includes edited pictures of Elvis Presley and Dolly Parton. In the same issue, Goldstein writes about a journalist who printed an unflattering item about him in The Miami

Herald. "...Jay Maeder obviously has syphilis of the asshole from being fucked by so many sailors. When he calls me "weird", this Neanderthal journalist is really commenting on his love affair with a castrated goat that lives at the local zoo." Although the magazine did often cover serious issues, this "shock humour" tone is generally characteristic of the magazine as a whole.

The deliberately offensive portrayals of public figures occasionally led to legal trouble. Goldstein vigorously defended these portrayals as satire, and therefore protected as free speech. The magazine's policy is laid out in issue 428, where Goldstein noted that many of the lawsuits either disappeared or were settled for relatively small amounts. "Our basic policy, however, is to defend all suits as vigorously as we can, not only as a matter of principle but also because that is the best way we know to discourage such suits from being brought in the first place." In this issue, Screw was forced to print an apology to Alabama Governor George Wallace as a condition of one such settlement.

The magazine ceased publication in 2003, when it ran into financial trouble. At the time, Goldstein attributed the magazine's collapse to the rise of freely available pornography on the Internet. There are unsubstantiated reports that former Screw Magazine employees restarted the magazine and are continuing to publish it without Goldstein's involvement.

Recurring Features

The following are features that appear on a regular basis in the SRC's issues of Screw Magazine, typically recurring weekly or monthly.

- "Screw You": Editorial, typically written by Al Goldstein, but occasionally featuring guest writers.
- "Shit List": A feature written by Al Goldstein about people or institutions who he dislikes. This feature may have a political bent, but also includes complaints about celebrities and what Goldstein considers to be poorly manufactured products.
- "Sex Scene: A Weekly Review of Sex in the News": A weekly three-page feature that covers legislation surrounding sex and obscenity (particularly about anti-pornography and anti-sex work laws), new publications about sex, activism, and "weird" news about sex. During the time that Al Goldstein was ensconced in the Wichita obscenity case, news items would often include information about the progression of the trial.
- "Mail": Letters to the Editor, usually humorous in tone.
- "Fuckbooks": Reviews of books on the topic of sex.
- "My Scene": Similar to "Penthouse Letters", a feature that publishes submissions by readers about their "sexual adventures or unusual erotic tastes".
- "Smut From The Past": Vintage erotic photographs submitted by Screw Magazine readers, typically dated between the 50s.

- "Dirty Diversions": Reviews of pornography films, usually written by Al Goldstein.
- "Swing Thing": A monthly column about swinging. Local New York swinging events are highlighted at the end of the column.
- "Screw Goes to Market": Product reviews, typically of sex toys and other erotic equipment.
- Carnal Classifieds: Three pages of personal and commercial classified ads. Text-only. The majority of ads are placed by men seeking women. There is a per-word charge for all ads, except in the "Prisoner Exchange" section where advertisements are free to place for all prisoners. Ads in this section are usually placed by men seeking erotic correspondence and pictures.
- "The Body Shop": approximately 10 pages of personal advertisements, primarily featuring ads from women and escort agencies seeking men, although there are some advertisements placed by men. The demographic that the male escorts are seeking is not always clear, though given Screw's readership, the advertisements are more likely targeted towards other men. A minority of the ads are for more specialized BDSM or fetish services. Many ads include pictures.
- "Naked City: The Consumer's Guide to Erotic Entertainment": reviews of porn, burlesque shows, and massage parlours located in New York
- "Mail Order Madness": reviews of erotic products that can be ordered through the mail, including films and BDSM equipment
- "Letter From [City]": An occasional "travel guide" column about the sex scene in a particular city that highlights night spots, sex shows, and discusses the availability of sex workers.
- erotic one-panel comics, signed variously by Caldwell, Lomax, Kim, Hobart, et. al.

Connections to Other Publications

Screw Magazine had a close relationship with Larry Flynt of Hustler magazine, who occasionally published guest editorials in Screw. In Issue 453, Goldstein announced that Larry Flynt would be running a new, less explicit "National" edition of Screw that was designed to appeal to advertisers.

Guest editorials ran frequently during the period of time in the '70s when Goldstein was dealing with both medical and legal troubles. The issues of Screw in the SRC collection feature editorials written by Nat Lehrman of Playboy and John Putnam, art director of Mad Magazine.

Political Leanings

The magazine reflected Al Goldstein's political views, and had a strongly libertarian bent. In issue #390, published in August 1976, Goldstein endorsed the Free Libertarian Party and announced that he was running for Congress. In his editorials, Goldstein criticized the ACLU and WBAI Radio for not supporting Screw, and characterizes the 'liberal press', including the New York Times and The New York Post as having "never been friendly to sexual freedom" (Issue 387). The magazine's support for sex workers, gay liberation, and pornography is explicitly framed within a libertarian rather than a liberal context, and coexists with the heterocentrism, sexism, and racism of the magazine's contents.

Al Goldstein's Jewish heritage is frequently mentioned in Screw, and is often the subject of self-deprecating jokes made by Goldstein and other writers. Goldstein also occasionally took political stances in Screw Magazine against what he perceived to be anti-Semitism. In issue 419, Goldstein's editorial accuses Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of anti-Semitism, writing, "The American Jewish Congress originally levelled the charge that Morgan Guaranty was routinely cooperating with Arab demands that American companies get bank certification before doing business with them, thus demonstrating their compliance with the Arab boycott against Jewish individuals and companies. This simply means that Morgan Guaranty's cesspool of anti-Semitism continues unchecked. It was but three years ago that Morgan Guaranty threw me out of their bank when they realized I was not only Jewish, but also in the sex business." In this particular case, it may be worth noting that Morgan Guaranty had previously advertised in Screw Magazine. (see: Issue 390, page 15).

Racial slurs are published in Screw, as in Issue 390, whose cover teaser promises "Sp*c Porn". Screw articles also often include a number of deliberately offensive racist jokes. In an editorial in Issue 451, Goldstein lists people who did not support Screw during the course of Goldstein's obscenity trial, and jokingly claims that many have fallen victim to the "Goldstein Curse." He lists various harms that have befallen them, such as losing a job or suffering a defeat in a run for government. However, of Florynce Kennedy, the American civil rights activist, Goldstein writes that she is "still black".

Al Goldstein: Biographical Information

Screw Magazine generally reflected Goldstein's ethos, and he was often the subject of articles, or served as a willing volunteer/demonstrator. His strong editorial voice influenced much of the magazine's content. In addition to publishing Screw, Al Goldstein's company, Milky Way Productions also owned and hosted a cable television program, Midnight Blue, which was also focused on sexual content.

Al Goldstein was an early and outspoken advocate for pornography and access to adult entertainment, and his legal entanglements were widely reported on, particularly in New York. His name appeared in the 1994 Beastie Boys' song, "Flute Loop", which included the lyric: "I'm like Al Goldstein/I'm all about screwing." He was the subject of a 2005 documentary film entitled Porn King: The Trials of Al Goldstein. In 2006, he published the autobiography, Al Goldstein: My Screwed Life.

At the top of his career, Al Goldstein was extremely rich, owning a Florida mansion with an 11-foot statue of a middle finger in his yard, and a famous watch collection, reportedly worth millions of dollars. However, in the early 2000s, the cost of lawsuits and divorce trials decimated his finances, and he was left homeless for a time. As of 2006, he was supported by magician Penn Jillette, living in an apartment that Jillette paid for.

In 1976, Goldstein announced that he was running as the Free Libertarian Party candidate for Congress from New York's 18th Congressional District. (The declaration of his candidacy can be found in issue 390 of Screw). Goldstein has remained invested in politics, and as recently as 2007, announced that he was running for the presidency of the United States, opposing the war in Iraq and endorsing gay marriage. His campaign logo was a middle finger "flying" an American flag. Goldstein's platform was outlined in a YouTube video, "Al Goldstein for President 2008", which can currently be found on his YouTube channel under the username, "Boobledotcom".

Steven Heller, a former Screw employee, credits Goldstein with having an immense influence on publishing, writing, "Goldstein was never as presentable or culturally palatable as Hugh Hefner, and Screw was never a beautiful and expensive production like Playboy. But had Al Goldstein not dared to create his "sex review," the floodgates of a more expansive and liberating publishing culture might never have opened."

Al Goldstein died December 19th, 2013 in a nursing home in Brooklyn, aged 77.

Wichita Obscenity Trial

Screw Magazine was the subject of a number of lawsuits and obscenity trials. Perhaps the most high-profile trial was the one held in Wichita, Kansas in the 1970s. A great deal of information about this obscenity trial is covered in the magazines in the SRC's collection.

Goldstein was charged with mailing obscene material across state lines after federal agents took out subscriptions to Screw and Smut in Kansas. Goldstein argued that this was entrapment. While the trial was ongoing, editorials and other Goldstein features often were taken over by guest writers or were put on hold. The trial was postponed a number of times, partly because Goldstein was dealing with very serious health issues at the time. In November of 1977, the federal obscenity trial was declared a mistrial. Many sources, including an interview with New York Magazine, characterize this victory as a "highlight" of Goldstein's career as a defender of the First Amendment. (A number of sources state that Goldstein won the Kansas obscenity trial in 1974. Although the Kansas trial began in 1974, it took three years to come to a conclusion.)

A number of commentators characterized the trial as unfair and unethical from the beginning. According to an article published by Robert Yoakum in the Columbia Journalism Review, there were only fourteen Screw subscriptions in Kansas (as compared to its estimated circulation of 120,000). Alan Dershowitz noted that although Screw Magazine was almost exclusively bought and sold in New York, the Justice Department chose to prosecute Goldstein in the extremely conservative city of Wichita, Kansas.

While the trial was ongoing, editorials and news pieces in Screw often featured information about the trial's progress and arguments in favour of Screw Magazine. Editorials range from discussing the difficulty of establishing a legal definition of "obscenity" (Issue 427) to criticisms of those who have failed to support Screw (Issue 451).

Artwork

Each issue of Screw in this collection features a coloured cartoon cover drawn by a wide range of cartoonists. Although some of these artists, such as Howard Darden, worked exclusively in erotic comics, others worked for more mainstream comic publications.

Issues with particularly notable cover artists include:

- #384, by Bill Plympton, a cartoonist who worked with publications such as Rolling Stone, Vanity Fair, and The New York Times.
- #444 and #450, by Dave Simons of Marvel and Ken Landgraf of Marvel and DC.
- #451, by Yossarian (Alan Shenker), a recently deceased New York-based underground cartoonist.
