

Hubby By Day ... Stripper By Night

When he's at home with his wife during the daytime, blond and bespectacled Horst Bueller, 28, looks a little like Truman Capote. But when he's on the job (he works nights) he looks like Elizabeth Taylor.

That's because Horst earns his living as a stripper at the Club Barbarossa in Frankfurt.

With the aid of a bra, he can look busty. A black wig further feminizes him. And his long, hairless legs — when mounted on high heels — look feminine enough to bring wolf whistles.

Horst's wife Lauren, 23, thought he was a musician at the club till he came home one night recently when she just happened to be up. He stank of perfume like a French bawdy house. And, even worse, there was a strange bra in the bathroom.

Lauren accused him of doing the naughty with another woman.

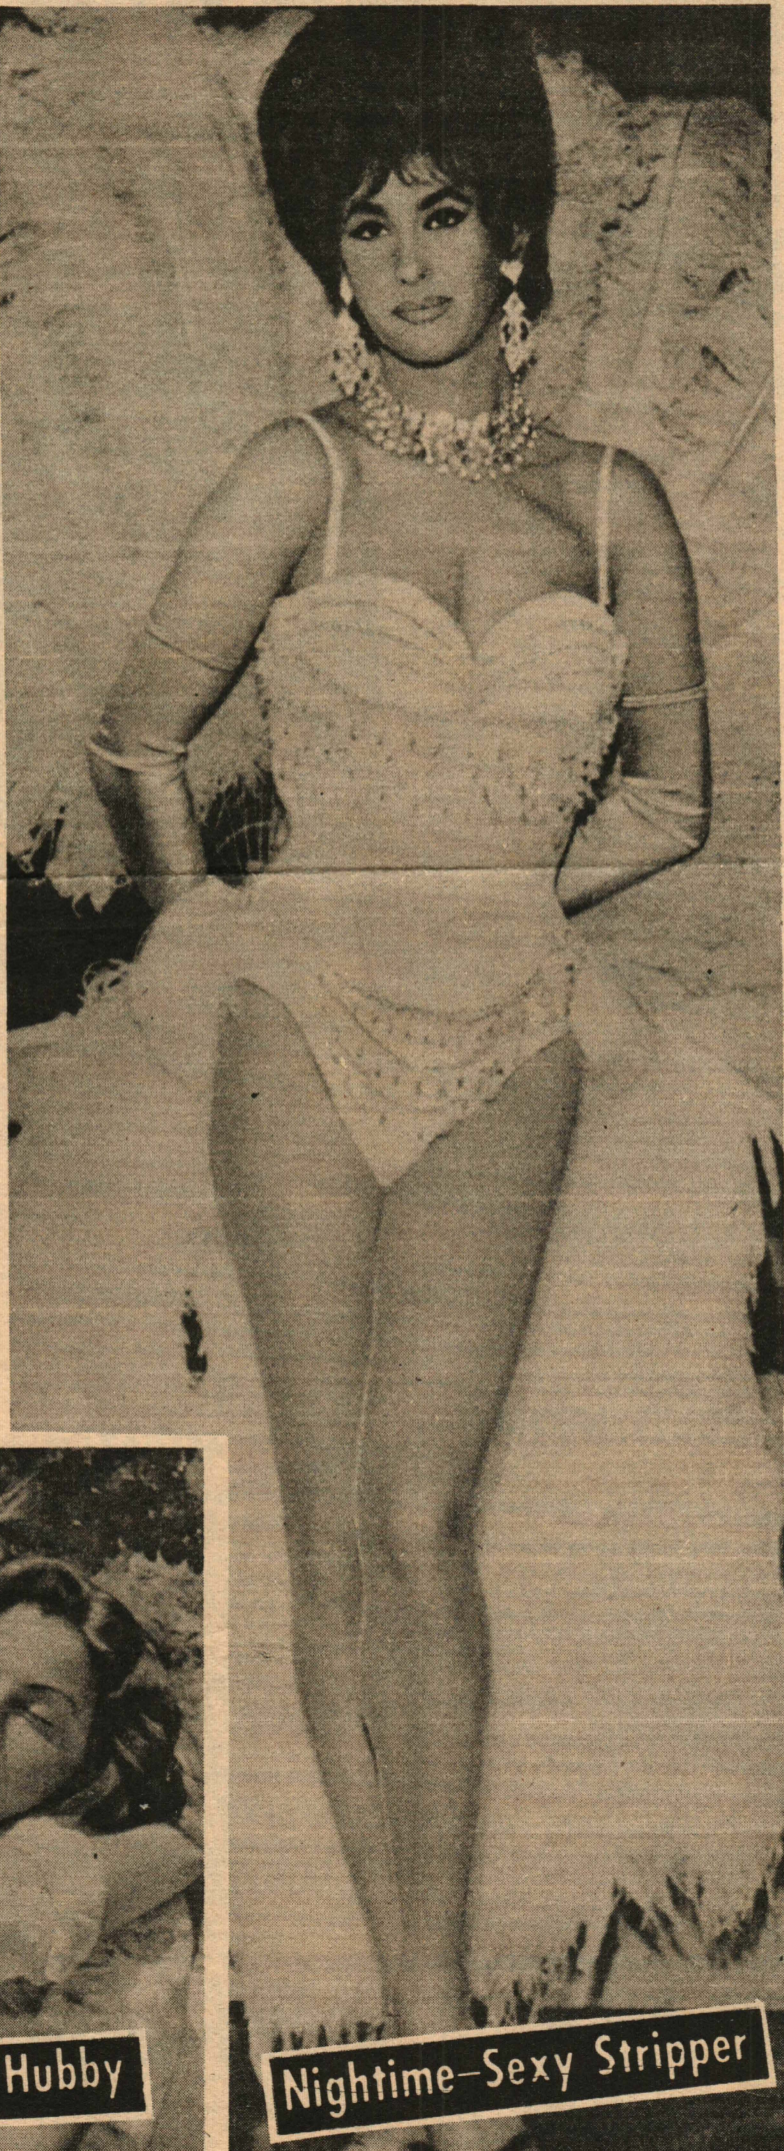

Horst broke down and admitted he was a stripper.

But, he insisted, he was not a queer.

He was an artist, he claimed.

Some artists sculpt, some paint, some act. But he impersonated females. And damn well, too.

Lauren accepted the strange job. But she's got one worry: What will she tell their future children when a son or daughter asks: "Mommy, what does Daddy do for a living?"

A Happy Family Man By Day...

He Turns Into A Woman At Night

by PAUL FUCHS

Horst Bund, 25, of Munich, Germany, is a man with two sex lives. By day Bund is a happily married man with two kids, but by night he becomes Helga Grunik, queen of Munich's night club circuit.

For Bund, the highest-paid and one of Europe's most famous female impersonators, success came with a wig and a pair of falsies.

"I started doing my act on a bet," Bund said.

"A friend dared me to impersonate a female dancer at his club. I needed the money, so I borrowed a wig, some falsies, and a dancing outfit.

"I had studied dancing, but male dancers are a dime a dozen. The first time I went on as a female, I knew I was a hit."

The audience loved the routine, and when Bund took off his wig, they were amazed. And no wonder, because properly made up, Bund looks like the sexiest bit of flesh on two feet.

Now playing to packed audiences every evening, he commands a salary of $3,000 a week.

"It's tough work," he says. "I practise my dance steps every day. It's hard to pick up the grace of female movement.

"And it takes me three hours of putting on makeup to become Helga Grunik."

But once he does, he is an instant star. After the show there is always a lineup of both men and women clamoring for his autograph.

"And sometimes that's not all they want," claims Bund. "I had to learn karate since some of the tougher customers started pestering me for dates.

"Now when anyone starts something, he finds out that Miss Grunik is as deadly as she is beautiful."

Away from his act, Bund is a softspoken family man living in the suburbs with his wife Eva, 24, and their two children Mark, 4, and Karen, 2.

Bund enjoys mowing the lawn and acting as a handyman, though he is careful not to build up unsightly muscles.

"I am happy about my husband's job," wife Eva said. "It allows him to be home all day, and it's made us quite wealthy.

"When he's not working, my husband is very manly. He's strong and athletic, being a dancer. And where it counts, in bed, there's no trace of Helga Grunik."

BY DAY Horst Bund is loving husband (above with wife)

Even the Bunds' neighbors, who had previously avoided them, are becoming fans. They are beginning to respect Bund ever since he appeared on a national TV network talking about his work and displaying his talent.

Bund claims he is so effective at being a woman that he can walk into a female locker-room, strip down to undies and bra, and get dressed again without anyone becoming suspicious.

"But it would be unfair to do such a thing," he adds. "After all, I have to maintain some professional ethics.

But he routinely goes shopping dressed in miniskirt and tight sweater. He buys the family groceries and goes into lingerie shops to get the stockings he needs for his act.

"It keeps me in practice," he said. "If I can fool people close up in everyday life,

NIGHTLY CHANGE turns Horst into sexy dancer

then it's easy to fool the audience in a set routine.

"The only problem is that occasionally a fan recognizes me. Then I take off as fast as I can."

Bund is scheduled to star in a movie to be shot this fall. He is also negotiating to appear at the Lido in Paris. But his great ambition is to make it in Hollywood.

"If Tiny Tim can become famous looking the way he does," says Bund, "then think what a sensation I would be in the United States."
